

Companies Exploring Chatham-Kent

-Potential New Jobs -

The Municipality of Chatham-Kent's Economic Development Services office has commissioned Renaissance Personnel to do a labour market evaluation on behalf of some out-of-province companies. The manufacturing companies are looking for a new site and want to find out how many potential workers in Chatham-Kent have the professional skills needed for MIG/TIG Aluminum Plate Welding.

"Chatham-Kent has a manufacturing background and it offers many solid advantages to outside companies," said the municipality's Manager of Business Development Stuart McFadden, "but what these particular companies really need to know is whether there are enough people with these very specific skills in Chatham-Kent to justify locating their operations here. Possibly as many as 60 aluminum plate MIG/TIG welders would be needed. But, with global competition the way it is, they need an airtight business case and must be very careful to do their homework."

People with skills in MIG/TIG Aluminum Plate Welding who are interested in possible future employment in this trade can take part in the labour market evaluation by submitting a resume and taking part in a practical demonstration of their skills. All the needed equipment will be provided. There is no guarantee of employment, but candidates who successfully complete the testing will be given primary consideration for any jobs that might become available.
